Pálinka is a Hungarian brandy derived from fruits native to the Carpathian basin. These are typically orchard fruits and most commonly seen are plum, pear, apple, cherry, grape, apricot, peaches, raspberries, strawberries and currants.

Pálinka made of pomace (törkölypálinka) is also very common and is a typical drink in the wine producing regions of the country. Within each fruit there are obviously varieties which play a significant part in the final flavour.

Tasting Notes: "Very pale straw colour with fine slow legs. Aromas of fresh red apple (Jonathan) and apple peel, honey and blossom. Buttery, stewed golden and red apple flavours, hints of vanilla and medium spice green paprika."
