Toast says their Craft Lager is "Crisp. Refreshing. Planet-Saving."

The latter comment comes from the brewery's commitment to addressing food waste, by replacing around a third of the barley used to brew this Craft Lager with surplus fresh bread. With one third of all food wasted and food production being the biggest climate change contributor, reducing that waste is their contribution to fighting climate change. Hence "planet-saving". Further, all their profits go to charities trying to fix the food system.

That's all good, but is the beer? Answer, yes: too many lagers lack flavour depth, but the bready mash-bill, and especially the European hops used, make a markedly hoppy, bright, fresh, craft lager with character.
